

NPI Christmas Newsletter 2020

As we reach the end of a year like no other, we pray that the hope of Christmas brings you peace and joy as we look toward 2021.

We are very grateful for your encouragement this year and look forward to updating you on all of the exciting ideas bubbling away at NPI HQ, as the new year unfolds. One we are delighted to share with you now is our second YouTube series, 'Empowering Parents', which will be launching at the start of January. From tweens getting their first phone, to toddler tantrums, we will be talking to a range of parenting professionals and experts on issues that affect everyday family life. We look forward to sharing more about the series in January, but for now, subscribe here and be the first to hear when the first interview drops.

You may have seen the findings of the Royal Foundation's survey into early years, which were released at the end of November. We hope you will agree that they made for a fascinating read. With our passion being the empowerment of parents, we are committed to continuing to support organisations that encourage parents in those precious, and exhausting early days. Read our response to the survey findings here.

Finally, we have been delighted to connect with Sally Clarkson, an American author and speaker who has shared for many years about the value of motherhood and the home. She has written us a beautiful blog post for the Christmas season, which we hope brings you much encouragement.

Thank you once again for your support, and our very best wishes for a happy, healthy Christmas and a joyful New Year.
